GREAT MARBLE SHAFT IN HONOR OF BENITO JUAREZ IS DEDICATED

rule," he said. The speaker compared the monument to the statue of Peace, the "Christ of the Andes" between Argentine and Chile.

Unveiling the Monument.

From the speaker's stand, the governor, followed by a long line of frock coated officials, walked upon the second section of the monument, and, grasping the veil rope, gave the unsuccessful pull which has aroused such comment of symbolism. A cannon roared the first salute, bands clashed, and crowds cheered. Facing the statue, the governor pronounced a formal word of inauguration.

Thence governor Sanchez and his followers, walked to the nearby place where the foundation of the new municipal palace is being laid. There he performed the laying of the cornerstone. Three pretty girls, Miss Emma Montes, with basket, Miss Carolina Ybarbo, with sprinkler, and Miss Eugenia Aleman, with trowel, performed the Masonic function after the documents were placed in the stone. A trowel used for the ceremony was especially made in El Paso of ebony and silver for the purpose.

Hospital and Library Dedicated.

As the next stage in the ceremonies, officials were seated within the just finished walls of the new and only library of Ciudad Juarez, facing the new monument on the municipal square in the southeastern part of the city. There Manuel Aro, representing the Spanish committee which raised funds for the building, delivered the address. Governor Sanchez made response.

Still the work of inauguration was not completed. Carriages brought the officials to the recently recreated Juarez hospital, which tops a hill at the south of the city, an ideal location for fresh air and a pretty view. The governor inspected the 11 bedrooms of the infirmary, which will be ready for use within a few days.

The Procession.

In the meanwhile the people were amused by bands and a repetition of the procession. Led by Reyo Juarez's band, the procession contained many interesting features—a float of kindergarten children in costume of various Mexican patriots, an infantile Hildegarde at the front; six schools of children in military formation, the boys in soldier uniforms and the girls in Liberty costume; a float from the Agricultural college, and students in uniform, natural societies of Juarez and El Paso with "Old Glory" in the fore of the latter; a float representing Peace, a formation of customs inspectors in immaculate uniform, officials, city, state and federal, and the military, all starting the city.

The Banquet.

Shortly before 1 o'clock, more than 100 men sat at banquet in the governor's honor in hotel Porfirio Diaz. Reyo's orchestra played in the door of the big dining hall, so closely were the tables packed. Seven courses with three wines were enjoyed by prominent Juarez officials, the visitors from the south and a few American guests from El Paso. During the ceremonies, postmaster J. A. Smith and counsel T. D. Edwards had accompanied the officiating party, and mayor C. E. Kelly, A. L. Sharpe, Felix Martinez, Harry Potter, A. Krakauer, J. R. Harper and others sat at table. Wait and table decorations were profuse, the national color scheme being carried out even to the food itself.

Francisco Portillo, the new and active mayor of Juarez, who is largely responsible for the city's new lease of life, wearing the tricolor of their country, occupied the center of the stage. Instead of the gray of the review the man of destiny wore the citizen dress of sombre color. The sun no longer shimmered from the nickel steel helmets of the bodyguard. The softness of a southwestern Indian summer evening had settled over the cross crowned city of the north.

Seated on an improvised platform, with a gaudy colored background of painted canvas, the grand old man of Mexico listened patiently, almost stoically, to the lengthy addresses of the leading citizens who extolled the virtues of the country's hero, who was to be honored in the town where he had made his military headquarters. In the half light of the autumn evening, all of the Indian blood of his ancestors shown in the rugged face of the first citizen-soldier of the republic.

The Bands Play Softly.

Everything was in keeping. No longer did the bodyguards gallop to and fro like watch dogs. The police were among his own people. Instead of the crash of military music, the Banda Policia, grouped to the right of the dais, crooned the softest, sweetest music ever made by wood winds and mellow brass. It was like a devotional service. The human pipe organ played the strains of a hymn, the beloved hymn of Mexico. The venerable patriarch arose as the music swelled into a crescendo of harmony. The vast audience which filled the open circle arose as one. A trumpet off to the south in the camp of the cavalry wailed its plaint.

Really Laid Cornerstone.

Stepping down from the platform with a firm tread, the world figure walked across the carpeted space to the cement base of the monument. There, surrounded by the important personages of the republic, the president laid the first stone of the monument for one of the triumvirate of heroes of which he was one. The act was not merely a form. Grasping the silver trowel firmly, he laid the cornerstone with all the care and skill of a master mason. None of the work was left to others. He spread the mortar from the silver champagne holder. The block was lowered by the Agricultural college students, the president guided it to its final resting place, tapped it on the top after the trick of an expert. The work had been well done.

In the center of the new municipal plaza soon to be surrounded by city and state buildings, the Benito Juarez monument is symbolic of the republic for which the man whose memory it honors fought. Imposing in its height of marble column, surrounded by the heroic bronze of beloved Benito Juarez, the monument, the cornerstone of which was laid by a world hero, stands as an epitome of republican progress, of the rise of Mexican liberty from the darkness of Spanish oppression, to the sunlight of independence.

Embodiment of Grito.

It is the embodiment in bronze and marble of the "grito" of Hidalgo. From his eminence the Juarez of bronze seems about to wave the banner of the republic which he holds and shout: "Long live religion! Long live our holy mother of Guadalupe! Long live America and Death to bad government!"

JUAREZ MONUMENT UNVEILED

IN MEXICO CITY ALSO

Mexico City, Mex., Sept. 12.—In the presence of a large crowd president Diaz this morning officiated at the unveiling and dedication of a great marble monument erected to the memory of Benito Juarez, the man who separated state and church in Mexico when he occupied the office of chief executive of the nation. The monument stands in the Alameda fronting Juarez avenue and is one of the most imposing and costly in the capital.

Another feature of the Mexican celebration Sunday was the delivery of the keys of Mexico City to the government by the French special ambassador.

The keys are of silver and were handed to president Diaz in the National palace Sunday morning. They were carried to France when the French soldiers returned to their country after the French occupation ended.

ISLAND OF MYSTERY.

Less than 3000 miles from the city of New York, and about a third of that distance from San Francisco there is situated, in the upper reaches of the gulf of California, a small island, worthless even for a mean purpose as the raising of goats, but nevertheless a center of attraction for the ethnologists and archaeologists of the Old and New Worlds for many generations.

The rocky peak, rising from the quiet waters of the gulf, is known as Tiburon island. Tiburon is a Spanish word, which, translated into English, means "shark." The waters around the islet are literally swarming with these horrors of the sea, and the inhabitants of the island are said to be no less ferocious than the shark. Tiburon is peopled with a handful of Indians, the only aborigines of their kind in the world, known as Soric. They are reputed to be cannibals, to be so fierce that none of the mainland tribes of Mexican redskins ever dared to invade their shores, and to possess the secret of manufacture of a peculiar deadly poison with which they prepare their arrows before battle—From Wide World Magazine.

HYPNOTIC TRIUMPH.

A doctor related the following story: "I had a patient who was very ill and who ought to have gone to a warm climate, but whose means were insufficient, so I resolved to try what hypnotism would do for him. I had a large sun painted on the ceiling of his room and by suggestion induced him to think it was the sun which would cure him. The ruse succeeded and he was getting better rapidly when one day on my arrival I found that he was dead."

"Did it fail, after all then?" he asked the doctor's hearers.

"No," replied the doctor, "he died of sunstroke."—From the Circle Magazine.

FRIGHTENED OFF.

A Washington car conductor, born in London and still a cockney, has succeeded in extracting thrills from the alphabet—imparting excitement to the names of the national capital's streets. On a recent Sunday morning he was calling the streets thus:

"Hatch!"

"High!"

"Kay!"

"Hell!"

At this point three prim ladies picked up their prayer books and left the car.—From Lippincott's.
